

Talking about Gambling with STUDENTS

Learning to set limits is an important part of growing up. However, for some younger folks, an attraction to gambling can easily spiral out of control.

They may start to gamble more often than they planned and lose more money than they can afford, yet find it very hard to stop. These are all warning signs of a gambling problem.

Young people are considered a high-risk group for problem gambling. Most adults who develop a serious problem usually started gambling before the age of eighteen. That is why prevention is key.

The topic of gambling deserves the same frank, direct approach used when talking to youth about safe driving and other risky behaviors. Their future may depend on it.

Problem Gambling & Students

Students can be affected by gambling related issues in several ways. Early exposure to excessive and problematic gambling behaviors by friends and family members often increases the risk of developing potential problems. Recent studies indicate that young people whose parents gamble on a regular basis develop problems at nearly twice the rate of those whose parents do not gamble.

Some signs of an issue may include:

- Frequent participation in gambling activities
- Increased absences/tardiness from school
- Borrowing/stealing of money
- Decline in school performance
- Lack of interest in non-gambling activities
